Photovoltaic panels cannot be sold

Overview

Selling a home with solar panels isn't as simple as transferring ownership to the next buyer. Solar agreements contain specific restrictions that can derail real estate transactions, delay closings for months, or force sellers to pay thousands in unexpected costs. The ownership and debt financing structures commonly found with solar panels are key to determining whether the panels are third-party owned, personal property of the homeowner, or a fixture to the real estate. However, some states. With more than 1 million U. Buyers and their solicitors will need a comprehensive set of documents from the seller, ensuring everything from installation to maintenance is in order. This step is essential to avoid any.
